

Laureate Winner

Tina Dobseavage, MD, FACP
Manhattan/Bronx Region

Dr. Tina Dobseavage is a private practitioner in New York City since 2002, and she also has affiliations at Northwell Health and Mount Sinai Hospital.

Dr. Dobseavage graduated from SUNY Stony Brook medical School in 1978. At the time, the school did not yet have its own hospital. As a result, medical students had clinical rotations in a wide variety of New York State hospitals - from County Hospitals such as Nassau County Medical Center to City Hospitals to VA Hospitals to large and small voluntary hospitals. After graduation from medical school, she pursued an internship in Internal Medicine in the program based at Long Island Jewish Medical Center during which, in addition to rotations at LU itself, she worked at Queens General, an HHC hospital, and at LaGuardia Hospital which at the time was run by HIP. After her internship she continued her residency in Internal Medicine at Harlem Hospital and stayed at Harlem to pursue a Cardiology Fellowship, finishing in 1983, followed by a position in Nuclear Cardiology at St. Luke's Hospital. Dr. Dobseavage worked in a physician shortage area at the Harlem HIP Center.

Dr. Dobseavage went into clinical practice at the Columbia University Health Center which cared for students, faculty, and staff until 1994. During those years she was the first physician for the HIV program in the health service and served as a cardiology consultant for my colleagues.

From 1988 until 1991 Dr. Dobseavage worked at urgent care centers in Queens and Long Island operated by a group called First Med. These were high volume operations, especially in the winter, serving up to 150 patients per day with overlapping physician shifts.

In 1991, Dr. Dobseavage returned to college health, working at the Barnard College Health Center and at Columbia Health Service. In 1995 she took a job as a general internist with the Montefiore Medical Group working at an office in Riverdale and worked there from 1998 until 2002 when the Center was closed. That is when the decision was made to go into private practice.

Dr. Dobseavage has been a member of ACP since early in her career and advanced to Fellowship in 2015. Since then, she has been increasingly involved in the Chapter Activities, including Lobby Days, Poster judging, and serving as Manhattan District President and now immediate past Councilor-at-Large for Bronx- Manhattan.
